Remnant Attractions at Goldenberg's.

THE bigger the week the bigger the remnant sale Friday. This first week in March has proved a hummer—naturally would with all the new things to be sold—and sold under such attractive circumstances as they have been here. Lots of remnants have been made—and out they goat Goldenberg's remnant prices just the same as if they were goods that had to be forced out.

You look for these sales—and why not? They represent good-sized dollars and cents savings. We've never lost sight of what a remnant price should be. Regular prices never masquerade as remnant prices here and never will. The old definition of "remnant" suits us, and you know and appreciate the fact that we have stuck to it.

RUSSIAN COUNTRY LIFE

BACE CUSTOMS BEST SEEN IN THE RURAL DISTRICTS.

In the Homes of the Czar's Rich Subjects Breakfast is Eaten at Noon.

From the London Mail. The Russians do not take the pride and interest in their country homes that the English, and latterly the Americans, have taken in theirs. The Russians prefer to know you, and to be known from their life in the town, and they seldom extend invitations to foreigners to visit them in the country. But it is only in the country that one finds them Rustons in the town the to sians; in the town they are cosmopolitan, with the language, the social arts and graces, especially of the French.

It was upon an early autumn morning at B o'clock that a party of three foreigners found themselves at a small station in the Russian steppes after a night's railroad journey. A drive of nearly five hours lay before us to the home of our hostess, and the troiks stood ready, having been sent over night. At the station there was plenty of hot tea-tea such as one gets only in Russia-and soon the horses dashed across the grass, and with nothing but grass in front, around, behind; grass carpeting the land for miles and miles, encroaching even upon the path itself.

Fording a Stream.

Soon we came to a small stream, and the horses plurged in without a moment's delay. A bridge was there, but the driver laughed, as he looked with pride at his splendid Orloff horses, and said: "My horses do not need a bridge." Then we passed through a villa where the cottages stood upon the grass, no paths between them, nothing but grass, grass. The cur-tains were drawn at the windows, and apparently all the cottagers were asleep. But suddenly there was a terrific din, and looking dogs of every size, who sprang yell- Russian, Italian, French, English, German- Press.

ing at the horses' noses trying to bite them. There were a dozen or more of them, and they looked flerce enough to terrify any one, but the driver was as cool and col-lected as though he had only some play-ful puppies gamboling about him. He turned to the one man in our party, said that he himself must hold the plunging horses, and directed him to take the knout, with its lash fifteen feet long, to stand on the step of the troika, and drive off the dogs. They fell away, howling with pain, and as much frightened as the two women who crouched in the troiks, clinging to one another and to the man. He by this time sat calmly triumphant, like a true British sportsman, and smiled condescendingly upon us, although we both declared we saw his hands tremble when he flung out that long lash of the knout. We raced through another village like the first, where the thatched roofs came down to about three feet from the ground, but the dogs did not molest us there, and then across a river too wide to ford. The horses galloped over the bridge, every plank shaking beneath us. They galloped through the got of the nark so that we had better and then came to a stop, sudden and excit-ing, before the broad steps of the house.

Homes of Wood. Russian country houses are not old, because, as a rule, they are built of wood, but this one dated from the time of the great Catherine. She gave it to one of her brave -and amorous-generals and his descendants. Its present owners have fitted it up entirely in the style of the period, with a few rooms in keeping with the Italian ar-chitecture. Marble steps led up to the ter-race, where we entered through long glass loors into an immense hall with countless small tables and settees. Each guest room was correspondingly large; you could have danced a cotillion in it, even with the quan-tity of furniture which one finds always in drive and so thrilling in experience; but at 12 o'clock we were ready for the family breakfast. It was such a one as you would get in France—of many courses, with numerous sweet dishes, and served with ceremony, a servant for each person at table. man is known by the company he keeps."

wonderful old manuscripts on the shelves, and bronze figures of Catherine and her friend, the general of Russian warriors, poets, musicians, looking coldly down upon us. We had tea in the library at 5 o'clock-English afternoon tea, with the difference of a samovar, instead of the steaming kettle; lemon for the tea, and sweets again, candled peaches and pears, strawberries, every fruit almost; preserves so rich and withal so pretty that they seemed too good to eat. To the left of the library lay the picture gallery, where Catherine figured again, resplendent in her imperial robes, and generations of family portraits hung quite as in an English ancestral hall. Glass doors opened out from the library upon a portico supported by marble columns; the steps supported by marble columns; the steps took one down to the terrace, and beyond there was a tiny path along the river, and a romantic little moving bridge pulled across by a rope—a French "bac," in fact. Titles of Mayors.

from the London Telegraph. When, asks the London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, is a mayor entitled to the prefix "right worshipful?" The question is not a purely academic one, as I have seen the "right worshipful the mayor of St. Pancras" in print totely. The mayors of London boroughs, following the example of those in the country, are generally content to be styled "worshipful." The lord mayors who have arisen in the last ten years at Manchester, Liverpool, Leeds, Birmingham, Sheffield and Bristol copy the precedents of London and York, and are "right honorable." Strictly, I believe, the mayors of some ancient cities—such as Exeter, Chester and Norwich—are by custom styled "right worshipful." Bristol was one of these cities till the creation of its lord mayoralty three years ago. These fine distinctions recall a story of the rural deans of Oxford diocese in the days of Bishop Samuel Wilberforce, These rural deans represented to their diocesan that they had a grievance in the fact that, whereas archibishops were "most reverend," bishops, "right reverend" and deans "very reverend," they had no title to distinguish them from their fellow-ciergy. The bishop suggested "rather reverend." Then the subject dropped. of those in the country, are generally conNEW ZEALAND HOTEL.

Hospitality in the Wilds of the Antipodes-Host a News Bureau. From the London Globe.

The bush hotelkeeper is a person of no small importance, wherever he may reside, and, in proportion to the disance his establishment may find itself from the centers of civilization, the more varied become his functions, whether official or merely devolving upon him from force of custom. To class him solely as an ordinary server of meat and drink would be to do him a wrong which he, fully alive to the exigencies of his post, would be the first to respecies of his post, would be the first to reserve from his ones, while in outward appearance though it may be, represents the sparsely scattered intended and the state of the sparsely scattered into the state of the sparsely scattered into the sparsely sent. Of the number of bush hotelkeepers the proportion of Irish or of Irish descent is astonishingly large. So much do these preponderate, indeed, that one is almost safe in alluding to them as the normal representatives of the class. Fine, jovial fellows they are for the most part, suffering from no surfeit of education, but connoisseurs in human nature, and, mercifully, entirely unvexed by politics, if from these may be excepted the burning questions of the local liquor regulations. Imbued with an intense passion for the turf as they are, it is seldom that a racehorse of greater or less pretensions, as the case may be, are, it is seldom that a racehorse of greater or less pretensions, as the case may be, may not be seen grazing somewhere in the neighborhood of their homesteads, between the more thrilling intervals of training near the far-away townships. Not infrequently, too, he is a fancier of sheepdogs, and, in his leisure hours, which, naturally enough, are plentiful, will break the raw youngsters into a knowledge of the work expected of them. Should he prove a successful breeder, his dogs will probably sell for a higher price than his race horses, a state of affairs somewhat Glibertian, if the dogs be judged from their outward appearance, which usu-vation leads them to state that the level of the little body of water corresponds very closely to the level of Lake Michigan. From this it is inferred that there is a subterra-nean connecting channel. The Hollanders argue that this does not solve the problem regarding the depth of the water. Sound-ings have utterly failed to determine its depth. Even very close to the rim of the supposed crater the water is a great many fathoms deep. Again, in the small lake there are species of fish not found in the big body of water. The mysterious pool yields up black bass weighing as much as six and one-half pounds. On the other hand, few of the fish found in Lake Mich-igan are ever caught in the deep hole in the
